It is 60 years since the end of World War II. Thousands of the veterans of this war are dying every day. Have you compiled the military stories of your family members yet? Don't wait until it is too late to talk to your family members who are veterans about their experiences and document these stories.

Debbie: let me tell you all that I know so it won't be lost. Shawn knows the same information -

From the Cherry family Bible:

William Stephen Cherry, born Oct. 1, 1875 at Forrest, Tex. to William Henry Cherry and Medora Delphine Hester.

May 4, 1902 Steve (Stephen) married Georgina Dnee Smith. Born to them

William Carroll Cherry	Feb. 3, 1903
Maida Dale Cherry	Nov. 21, 1905
Elbert Stephen Cherry	June 29, 1911

(mother)

William Stephen, here after referred to as Poppa, grew up in Forrest, Tex. and left home about age 20. He took a job as a prison guard at the Texas State Penitentiary in Rusk, Tex. as a guard on the prison gang that built the Texas State Railroad from Rusk to Palestine. There is a lot of iron ore in the pail around Rusk, Tex. and the prison made money from the sale of pig iron. (cast iron). In 1894 the railroad was constructed to haul charcoal from the oak flats on the Neches River near Palestine, Tx. to fire the ore smelters at the penitentiary. When Mamma + Pappa married they returned to Forrest, Tx. where they built the farmhouse on the land where it stands most of my life. This way I can establish and prove up the dates that Pappa told me years ago. The railroad is still in use but no longer hauls pig iron or charcoal -

Reynolds-Cherry-Stanford Family

Interesting note: grand mother Cherry's ~~Brother~~ ~~father~~ ~~operated~~ ^{Jacksonville} operated a peanut candies factory in ~~Paok~~, Tx. same time around the turn of the century. I have no dates except that he was born Oct. 6, 1882. His name, the best I can tell, was Arthur Wingfield Smith.

Hope this tells you some of your past history.

THE TEXAS STATE RAILROAD

The Texas State Railroad, T.S.R.R., located in Anderson and Cherokee Counties was constructed in 1894 by the State Prison System as a penal facility serving anticon tumescence and penitentiary at North Rusk. In 1921 the iron furnace and prison were closed and converted into a State Hospital. The Texas Board of Managers subsequently leased the railroad first to the St. Louis & Southwestern R.R., and later the Texas South-Eastern R.R. for carrying general merchandise, lumber products and passengers. The last ton of the Texas South-Eastern was made in 1989. Today the Texas Parks & Wildlife Department is developing the Texas State Railroad into a living history railroad park designed to preserve an example of railroading's golden age for Texas' young and old alike.

The person using this ticket assumes all risks, all responsibility and loss of or damage to property from whatever cause arising and releases the railroad from liability therefor. Management reserves the right to revoke any license, right or privilege by loss ticket by refund of any money paid.

One, Two, Buckle My Shoe by Patricia Law Hatcher, CG, FASG

When I think of this children's counting rhyme, it raises the question, What was our ancestors' footwear like? It's something we may not have thought about, but as we strive to understand what our ancestors' lives were like, footwear and clothing is something to consider.

Inside their homes, they may have worn some type of soft footwear (slippers), just as we do today. Sometimes they went barefoot in warmer areas (especially the children), but insect bites, splinters, and uncleared ground made this an undesirable option for general outdoor activities. Their first preferences would have been for what they knew, adapted for a new environment if necessary.

In Europe, common people wore wooden-soled footwear, often called clogs. (Be aware that the meaning and description of terminology for clothing varied over time.) These had leather uppers nailed onto the wooden sole, hence the advantage of long wear. These simple styles that could be made inexpensively at home were imported to the Americas. Clogs were used in various ways. They might have been worn as the main footwear, with or without stockings, or as something like an overshoe to help protect the wearer's shoes from mud.

Frontier settlers soon found that the moccasins favored by the Indians were practical and relatively easy to create, and in some areas these became an accepted form of footwear.

I have noticed that in seventeenth-century inventories there is a differentiation between shoes and boots. For example, a man might be said to own one pair of boots and one pair of shoes, but rarely do you see more than one of each. Technically, "boot" referred to footwear that came above the ankle, often being calf-high or even knee-high.

There was another difference between shoes and boots. Shoes had fasteners. Shoelaces are said to have been invented about 1790, and laced shoes came in to common use in the 1800s. So, for our early American ancestors, shoes were fastened onto the feet by latches (straps) secured by buckles. Shoe buckles have two parts. The "chape" is the working portion of the buckle. It might have bars and/or sharp prongs to hold the straps in place. Not that they always worked. Shoe buckles seem to have been subject to frequent breakage or loss. For example, on one day in 1784 my ancestor in Virginia bought one pair of men's shoes, for which he seemed to have needed three pairs of shoe buckles.

Quite a few broken, lost, or abandoned shoe buckles have been found in archaeological digs or among miscellaneous "old stuff," in both Europe and America. They also appear in drawings and paintings. Thus, we know that shoe buckles also could have a decorative component, ranging from simple scrolling on the metalwork of the chape to paste jewels on a shoe buckle belonging to a society gentleman or lady. Today, there are a number of companies that supply replicas of antique shoe buckles, especially for persons involved in reenactments. You can find many illustrations on the Internet.

One, Two, Buckle My Shoe

I have a fascinating drawing in my home that was an illustration to an old English book of childrens' songs, in this case "Hot Cross Buns." The lady of the house appears in the doorway wearing soft slippers. Her two children have shoes with buckles. The old woman selling the hot cross buns is standing on the cobbled street. She is wearing shoes with buckles, but attached to the shoes are metal rings that elevate her shoes above the cobblestones (and the water, mud, and sewage commonly found on city streets). These rings are called "pattens" and were often attached to shoes and clogs in early America.

Both shoes and boots were manufactured by a cordwainer (leatherworker) or shoemaker. Shoemakers formed shoes by shaping leather around a wooden "last." Each last was a different size. Lastmaking was considered a separate trade from shoemaking, as were the tanners and curriers who prepared the leather. Early footwear wasn't particularly shaped to the foot. In fact, even custom footwear didn't come in left and right! It would be made to general length and width, but both shoes were just alike. Shoes specifically for left and right feet were mass-produced in the mid-1800s.

Any type of footwear was repaired as it wore, so early shoemakers--and shoe wearers--did as much repairing as creating, probably more.

Adequately-shod feet were critical to successful colonial ventures. In the Colonial Williamsburg Journal, in "Footprints on the Past," D. A. Saguto (Colonial Williamsburg's master boot and shoemaker) writes that "The earliest surviving list of recommended apparel for the would-be Virginian was written for servants going to Smyth's Plantation in 1618. On it are three pairs of shoes and repair supplies--soles, thread, awls, pitch, and rosin--worth 1.5 times all other articles of regular clothing combined." The Massachusetts Bay Company suggested that a man should have four pairs of shoes and three pairs of stockings.

Under their shoes, boots, and clogs, people often (but not always) wore stockings, generally knitted of wool (only the wealthy could afford silk, and cotton doesn't seem to have been used much for knitting). To help you envision your ancestors' stockings, one word will help--baggy. Stockings were not shaped to the foot and leg, but were generally tubes. They bagged around the ankles and over the insole. If you think about it, it makes more sense from a practical point of view, because the stocking could be turned for even wear, making it longer lasting. This did, however, sometimes necessitate the use of garters to keep the stockings up.

Stockings were often more colorful than other elements of wardrobe in an inventory. For example, a collateral relative of mine died in 1757 with few assets other than his clothing, which included a pair of blew worsted stockings, a pair of black worsted stockings, a pair of blew yarn stockings, and a pair of pale blew yarn stockings. Red stockings were popular in the colonial period.

One, Two, Buckle My Shoe

Unless your ancestors were among the wealthy, who would have followed fashion (fancy men's shoes had higher heels--often painted red!), they were most likely to have chosen footwear that fit their lifestyles and the environment in which they lived.

Patricia Law Hatcher, CG, FASG, is a technical writer, instructor, and professional genealogist. Her oft-migrating ancestors lived in all of the original colonies prior to 1800 and in seventeen other states, presenting her with highly varied research problems and forcing her to acquire techniques and tools that help solve tough problems. I am trying to locate a Mr. Sydney R. Smith. He is the father of my husband. I believe I have located him as late as 1995. There was a Sydney R. Smith divorced in Cherokee county in 1995 that would be the right age who divorced a Patricia J. Smith. I came to a dead end there. My husband's birth certificate lists him as being 37 when my husband was born in 1965. I suppose that means he was born in or around 1928. He was never married to my mother in law. If anyone living in Cherokee county knows of this man or this woman he divorced, please contact me by email with Sydney R Smith in the subject line. Thank you. Cheri' Smith

Subject: Isaacks & Grisham
Do you have any info on Lucetta Isaacks & Isaac Grisham. They are listed seperately with their families in 1850 census (both last names misspelled). Then, they are on the 1860 census with a child named Susan and also his brother staying with them. I am told that they are the parents of my great-grandfather, Lafayette M. Grisham, born 1862. However, something happens to Isaac Grisham after 1862, and Lucetta remarries. I can not find Susan or Isaac after 1860 census.

Amanda married Mr. Hartless
She should have known much better
Every time she turned around
He was out to get her.
But he met his match one fatal day,
Mrs. Hartless made Hartless pay.
Armed with the handle of an axe,
She gave him a bunch of well-earned whacks.
Alas poor Amanda was not yet free,
Off to a Cherokee jail went she.

Amanda was Amanda Gray, daughter of Alexander Gray, who lived in Cherokee County from about 1857 to his death in 1879. Amanda was first married to a Mitchell who apparently died (hopefully of natural causes) in Mississippi before she immigrated to East Texas. I would appreciate knowing the date of Amanda's trial so that I can ask for copies of her trial documents.

She was the sister of my ancestor James Gray who died in the CSA cause in New Mexico.

Subject: Rusk boarding house fire I'm looking for information on a boarding house fire that might have happened in Rusk, Texas. From the 1920 census, I believe the house would have been on Richey's Sawmill Road, and had the following people living there:

Rachael Rogers (Rodgers), 54, b. Tennessee (Landlady)

Zack A. Rogers (Rodgers), 18, b. Arkansas

Charlie White, 62, b. Texas

Almer Gregg, 40, b. Texas

Elmer Loy, 23, b. Texas

Mack Dock, 20, b. Tennessee

Robert Simmons , 35, b. Texas

Lee Dodson, 45, b. Texas

Jim Sizy, 40, b. Greece

Harriet Dodson, 16, b. Texas

Everyone living there (per the census) was white and either widowed or single. All but Rachel, the landlady, works at a sawmill (Richey's perhaps?). Rachel is living elsewhere in Rusk in the 1930 census.

I would appreciate hearing from anyone who knows of this house and possible fire. Does any one know what the town newspaper would have been at that time? Thanks, Trisha Strickland
