Editor's Letter

Thanks to James L. Douthat of Mountain press for his article “ORIGINAL-ORIGINAL-ORIGINAL.

Deborah Burkett honors “A Jacksonville Soldier and War Dogs In Korea” beginning on page 67.

The late Helen Wooddell Crawford compiled 19 books of Cherokee County Obituaries ending in 2001. I considered to walk in her footsteps and publish more obituaries after her death. I went so far as making a list of the “2002 Obituary Citations” from the Jacksonville Daily Progress, Rusk Cherokeean-Herald and the Tyler Morning Telegraph. I never completed the book of 2002 obituaries. The “2002 Obituary Citations” begins on page 70.

I hope you enjoy this issue of TREE TALK.

ORIGINAL-ORIGINAL-ORIGINAL

I am sure that in the run of this newsletter that I have mentioned from time to time to try to double check the original documents that you are quoting. I have had so many comments about this one item of demand for the "real" researcher. I know that far too many find a fact and they just jot it down without ever looking for the source. This is especially true for those that had a chart full of names and dates without the work of having to "prove" the point. One of my nephews died this week and a date was given for his birthdate in the obituary that differed from my records. I talked with his oldest sister for the longest time, and she is checking the original birth certificate. Without checking the original document, we might miss so much.

In working on the early records of New Hanover County, NC, I ran across a Will dated 1739 for one Thomas Marsden. This Will might be abstracted in some collections as the date and the name with the witnesses list. They would miss the real important facts given in the original. In summary the major points are:

"Father: Richard Marsden - Mother: Elizabeth Marsden 'of Halifax in ye County of York in England' - brother: William Marsden - Witnesses: William Dutton, Will Carr, Jno. Marshall - No probate - Coat of Arms on seal."

What is missing? Wife - children - estate - lots of the usual, but then there are no descendants. But on the other hand, there is a brother and his parents. The brother is likely to have descendants and the parents would more than likely be the same for him until proven otherwise. But note the statement at the end that says, "Coat of Arms on seal." He is a titled individual as the coat of arms at this time in history was only used for those families with some title, either present or in the past. This is not just a pretty picture that is used, it is a statement of the family history. Britain and countries in Europe held to a strict code of ethics in this matter.

For another example, when I stated working in genealogy, there was no internet, groups, microfilm, computers, or any local library with anything other than the old standby histories of a few counties. You had to go to a courthouse to reap any information. I was in the Montgomery County of Virginia courthouse years ago when I was in college. In looking at the early deed books for one of my g-g-g-grandfathers land, I found something that really caused me to look very closely at the entry. The deed registered the property with no problem. But in the margin of the book was a note from the clerk at the time it was registered that said, "He signs in English 'Painter' but in German it is 'Bender'". Now since I was in a large university at the time, I looked for a German speaking professor for help and he said it was caused by the way the German was pronounced, "Bainter". I saw this item transcribed and abstracted later and there was no mention of this note in that copy. Where would all my later research have gone if I had missed that point?

ORIGINAL-ORIGINAL-ORIGINAL

I was recently looking into the Shenandoah Valley for information on the parents of an ancestor. Everywhere I looked there was a stone wall. I knew they would have been there, but no records of the parent. Only point was he was killed on the way to make his last payment on the farm, leaving a widow and three orphans. I found the orphans in many other records being bound out to three different families, but I couldn't find anything before the bondage. I knew Virginia records well enough by this time to go to the courthouse and ask to see the "Marriage Packets" of the man and his two sisters. One of the sisters shows up in the listing of marriages. In the basement with flashlight and ball bat, I found her packet and there was the bond, license, and finally the consent form. On the little Consent form her guardian says, "I have known her since birth on [date] to be the daughter of John and Lena .". In one little statement we had the parents of both brother and sister. Now the sad thing is these consent forms are very seldom copied or microfilmed by the state or even those commercial companies that do this for the states. Normally, with these older states like the original thirteen colonies, many of their original records are missing and therefore, they just use what they have for so many items that genealogists need for verification of the fact.

I know that have said it before and I will say it again, but search for the original as best you can. But where can I see the original records? In most of the southern states where I do the bulk of my research, the State Archives is one of the prime sources. The Archives might not have the original, but they have copied most of these for their state. Now in the south, most of the Archives have some sort of arrangement with local libraries to allow the microfilm of those originals to be loaned on an inter-library loan system. You might contact your local Archives for the state of interest to see what they will offer. I know that Virginia, Tennessee, and Texas will loan on inter-library loan in some form or another. Check them out!! You never know what you have missed when you rely on a copy.

A Jacksonville Soldier and War Dogs in Korea by Deborah Burkett

I've written lots of stories for local newspapers but never researched and written one quite like this. I suspect you'll be moved as well, as you learn the history of war dogs and their handlers in the Korean War.

I'm always amazed at stories still to be uncovered locally; often quite by accident. Case in point is the story of Jacksonville resident, the late Charles Broadway, Corporal US Army, a soldier in Korea with war dogs. In the fall of 2021, while meeting with Broadway's daughter, Lisa Finch, to discuss the preservation of several historical items found in her Aunt Joann Gray's estate, we talked of many things.

As I learned of her father's story I asked if he might consent to be part of Flag Day? He would agree and through Lisa's efforts, plans were made. Sadly Broadway would pass away March 25th of this year. But the family will be present at the upcoming

June 14th Flag Day event at the Hazel Tilton Memorial Park in downtown Jacksonville to receive a plaque in his honor.

Much of the following information is taken from K-9 Korea, a book published in 2017 by J. Rachel Reed, in which Broadway is featured along with other men of the 8125th Sentry Dog Detachment.

It's an incredible story and thanks to Reed, the lost history of military working dogs in Korea is documented. It tells of the bond forged with their handlers, roughly 60 men in number. The soldiers would come to rely on their dogs for protection during long, dangerous night watches and for companionship, just as soldiers have done throughout our country's history.

During the American Revolutionary War and also the Civil War, dogs "took up residence" in camps and followed soldiers for food and companionship (which went both ways). In World War I, dogs served their military masters by delivering messages across battle lines and by staying in foxholes to comfort shell-shocked soldiers. It wasn't until Pearl Harbor that Dogs for Defense (DFD) was established. "Recruitment posters went up around the country touting benefits of canine soldiers. Their keen senses and perception at night could replace the efforts of six armed men."

During the Korean conflict, military leaders realized it would be difficult to hold the line of the Thirty-Eight Parallel which divided North and South Korea ... then they remembered American's K-9 units from World War II. So in 1953, the Department of Army started pulling soldiers from an infantry pool to man a new unit and the 8125th Sentry Dog Detachment was formed. The idea was to establish a security detail program consisting of farm boys from around the country. The thinking was they would remain detached from the dogs because on the farm they were used to animals being used as tools.

Also in 1953, Charles Broadway, a farm boy from Jacksonville, Texas, was drafted into the Army at age nineteen. Charles' father, in fact everyone in the family, worked hard to keep their farm going. Charles connected with their animals such as horses and especially the bird dogs. Once in the service, Broadway's described in Reed's book as "a larger than life character, 6 ft. tall who soon garnered the nickname "Tex."

Just as tragic war stories have occurred at other times in our nation's history, it's the same here. Even though there are details of loyalty and heroism in the Korean conflict there are heart-wrenching aspects as well. Why did the Department of the Army tell the soldiers their dogs--really their beloved fellow soldiers--would return home with them at wars end when it was all a lie?

A Jacksonville Soldier and War Dogs in Korea by Deborah Burkett

In the 1950s the US military "failed to see the dogs as anything more than expensive equipment." The reality not considered was that a strong bond would be forged between dogs and their handlers. " ... to see a dog in war or even better to touch a dog was a powerful tangible reminder of home."

Each soldier in the Detachment was paired with one dog but occasionally had to handle more than one. Broadway was paired with the flop-eared Rex, tattoo #E248. Broadway described him as "unable to win any beauty contest but smart."

Another dog would also become part of Broadway's story. "Blind" Sam, with cataracts clouding his eyes and his vision almost non-existent he was not healthy enough to participate as a war dog but tagged along with Broadway everywhere-to chow hall or to the Post Exchange. But Broadway's working dog was Rex; together they guarded the farthest perimeter of the post in complete darkness and sometimes in brutal freezing weather. During one of their night patrols, Rex became the only dog of the 8125th ever attributed with a kill, a Korean threaten the perimeter, wouldn't stop when told to do so.

Broadway would become a Vet Tec, a handler who took on responsibility for medical care of the dogs. This meant he would have to stop working with Rex but would care for dogs such as Sam. And this is where the plot turns and Broadway's mission becomes "saving just one".

The day finally arrived when the handlers received their orders, to report in three hours, to ship out and to depart for the states. The men were devastated; some couldn't bring themselves to say good-bye to their special companions! Others did so, but with tears and heavy hearts. All the while still thinking the dogs would be cared for.

However, paper work was accidently discovered by a soldier that the dogs were being left behind. Broadway had suspected as much, had seen the writing on the wall. He hatched a plan to get Sam away from the kennels without notice. He stowed him in a truck bed, covered with a large canvas tarp. If caught he'd say, as a Vet Tec, he was taking Sam into Seoul to a Vet there. Broadway then falsified Sam's death certificate and left it at the base and drove to the orphanage.

"Once out of sight, Broadway got out of the truck and invited Sam into the cab so the friends could spend their last hour together, sitting side by side. Sam rested his head on Broadway's lap."

A Jacksonville Soldier and War Dogs in Korea by Deborah Burkett

As they got closer to the orphanage, Sam got excited, remembering his previous visits. He loved the place! The children love him. The missionary promised Sam would be cared for until the end of his days.

Back at the post, Broadway couldn't contain himself, as he smiled from ear to ear. Not the least concerned about stealing government property and falsifying documents since technically he just "put down" his old friend.
